Happy Holidays from CNSI

Happy holidays followers!

It's been quite a year at CNSI. We had a lot of notable achievements over the course of 2015. We began work on updating New Hampshire's vital records digital infrastructure, created cutting-edge home health apps in Michigan and helped Washington state improve its Medicaid delivery.

Most notably, perhaps, we launched a cloud-based Medicaid Management Information System shared between Michigan and Illinois. We've talked about the health and economic benefits of the system before (if you'd like to read more, check out an article from the Lansing State Journal just this week) but we wanted to take this time to thank the people that made it happen.

Our ability to execute on the immensely complicated health IT projects is entirely dependent on our employees, and we could not be more grateful. We are proud of their skill, hard work and dedication. CNSI, and all the states we operate in, are better off for it.

In 2016, we look forward to more of the same. The public health solutions we engineer save taxpayers money and improve the delivery of health care. We hope to leverage this outcomes and our current health IT successes in other states in the coming months.

So here's to you 2015! Thank you for the wonderful memories and many more in 2016.

What made you proud in 2015? Let us know by joining the conversation on Twitter. Find us @CNSICorp.