A Letter from CNSI's Executive Leaders

To Our Clients, Employees, Partners, and Recruiting Candidates:

CNSI prides itself on helping our state and federal government clients use innovative technology to solve their most complex problems. As we contend with and address the COVID-19 global health pandemic, we are redoubling this commitment to help our clients meet their mission critical requirements as they adapt their priorities and operations in this new and rapidly changing environment.

What we are experiencing with this global health pandemic is unprecedented in our lifetimes. For most of us, it feels like we are writing new pages in the playbook every day based on new information and changing requirements. CNSI's mission is predicated on helping our state and federal government clients improve the health and wellbeing of individuals and families through innovative and transformative technology solutions. Critical to this are innovation, flexibility, and adaptability, and working closely with our clients to navigate through this time of uncertainty.

Some of the new challenges are apparent; others will arise over time. Many of the changes have the potential to profoundly affect our way of life. The work we collectively do to serve the most vulnerable populations in our communities is even more critical today. As a trusted partner, we stand ready to help our clients as they confront new challenges and anticipate and think through how this global health pandemic may fundamentally change the way we do many things in the future.

We would like to thank our clients for their flexibility and support as we shifted to working remotely. This enabled our employees to continue collaborating with our clients and supporting their mission critical requirements, while also practicing good citizenship and complying with physical distancing guidelines. The partnership and collective mission focus to serve the most vulnerable populations in our communities exemplify the spirit and passion that will get us through this extraordinary time. We, and all our colleagues at CNSI, are proud to work alongside our clients, now more than ever before.

To our recruiting candidates and potential future employees, we are open for business. Our recruiting team is working diligently to fill staffing needs for our clients, and we are actively recruiting and on-boarding employees each week. We are excited to welcome you to our team.

As we continue to confront this global health pandemic, we will stay true to our mission, focus on the health, welfare, and safety of our employees, and support the critical work of our clients.

Brighter days are ahead.

Sincerely,

Todd Stottlemeyer
